

Summer Styles.

SOMETHING ABOUT JEWELRY AND ORNAMENTS OF GOLD—NEW JEWELRY—NEW STYLES OF PARASOLS AND FANS FOR THE LADIES.

A new style of bracelets and necklaces, made from a web formed of fine gold wire knit in tubular form, and then flattened and split is destined to supersede the braided ones which have so long been worn. Some of these are in dead satin finish, with heavy but chaste mountings, and set with pearls, emeralds and other precious stones. This web-work is in open mesh, and in some of the jewelry made of it a thin piece of sheet-gold is passed through it, shining through the meshes in the shape of stars, giving it a most glittering and brilliant appearance when worn in the evening, in brightly-lighted apartments. Other patterns are shot with spangles of gold, soldered upon the web. Those mounted with slides of burnished gold, and set with alternate rows of small pearls and topaz stones, are the most approved in style and finish. This knit jewelry is also made in open chains and clasps as ornaments for looping the sleeves of evening dresses, and is suitable and stylish for belts to be worn at receptions and entertainments where ladies are much dressed. It will soon also be worn in the form of watch cases to attach to the chain, as already some have been appropriated to that use, or been made in that form by the manufacturer. This jewelry is exceedingly light and shapely for a mingling of gold and silver in its construction. A mingling of gold and silver in jewelry sets, is much in vogue. In most of these the oxide is attached to the gold by a spring, and is so constructed that the former can be removed without impairing the looks of the jewelry. This will suit ladies of capricious tastes and limited means, as they can change their jewelry to their liking without additional expense. This patent mixing of gold and silver in jewelry, is a new style, and is a decided improvement in size; the tiniest little balls are the extent reached in our ornaments.

In the line of parasols and sun umbrellas, a new style has made its appearance, called the taper handle. This is the "happy medium" between the club and cane. The handles are carved and repeat form, and represent heads of animals, horses' heads, and other curious designs, some of which are old silver, others of oxidized silver, and still others of pearl and agate. The elegant tapered handles in the taper form are desirable and decidedly unique and artistic. For a rich and expensive shade, those encased in handwork in the angle shades, and the taper handle, trimmed with heavy knitted fringe, are very elegant, and have been introduced but a short time. The most stylish fans have a sweep of half a yard, and are composed of satin, painted in gorgeous large flowers and vines, and some representing birds, insects and animals. Threaded fans are still in vogue, and some in perfectly plain satin covered with Swiss and point applique lace, with pearl, ebony and gilt frames, are used for the theater and concert room. Russian leather fans, enclosed in a dagger-shaped case, are attached to the chain for use when the promenade or traveling.—N. Y. Evening Post.

ANECDOTES OF DICKENS.—Blanchard Jerrold, in his new book, "A Day with Charles Dickens," quotes the following anecdote from a private journal concerning Dickens' juvenile precocity as a newspaper reporter: Dickens began his career when a youth of sixteen, under his name John Henry Barrow, who started The Mirror of Parliament, in opposition to Hassard. Hassard always compiled from the morning papers, whereas Barrow engaged a special staff of able reporters, sending each important oration in proof to its speaker for correction. When Stanley fulminated his philippic against O'Connell, it fell to young Dickens' turn to report the last third of it. He returned it to Barrow, with the remark that the first two thirds were so badly reported as to be unintelligible but if the gentleman who reported his appearance at Mr. Stanley's, note-book in hand. It was with evident hesitation that the servant ushered him into the library, the table of which were covered with newspapers. Presently the master of the house appeared, eyed the youth suspiciously, and said: "I beg pardon, but I hoped to see the gentleman who had reported part of my speech," etc.

"I am that gentleman," retorted Dickens, turning red in the face, and feeling his dignity somewhat offended.

"Oh, indeed?" replied Mr. Stanley, pushing about the papers and turning his back to conceal an involuntary smile.

It was not long before Sir James Graham stepped in, and then Stanley began his speech. At first he stood still addressing one of the window-curtains as Mr. Speaker. Then he walked up and down the room, gestulating and declaiming with all the force he had shown in the house of commons. Graham, with newspaper before him, followed, and occasionally checked him, when he had forgotten some trifling point, or had transposed one proposition in the place of another. When the entire speech had been fully reported, Stanley returned the review, with a note to Barrow, highly complimentary to the striking reporter, and with a shadowy prediction of a great career for him in the future. Dickens had totally forgotten this incident, until many years after, he was invited to dine with Lord Derby for the first time, before dinner with the other guests he felt a strange consciousness of having been in it before, which he could not account for. He was in a state of bewilderment all dinner-time; for he could not recall the circumstances which brought the reporting adventure to his mind. But, at all events, something did, and he reminded his host of it. Lord Derby was delighted to recognize in his new friend his boy-reporter, and told the story to a select few, who, with Dickens, had stayed after the rest of the party had departed.
